WEDNESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 16.

LIGHTING AND HEATING PASSENGER CARS.
The average passenger who sits in the brightly lighted passenger coaches on our great railway lines, and reads his evening paper as pleasantly as if under the chandelier of his own library, scarcely thinks of the ingenuity and care by which the soft gaslight has taken the place of the sickly and unsteady illumination afforded by oil. On the Pennsylvania Railroad, whose cars are lighted with gas, the gas tanks are suspended under the floor of the cars, in which the gas is condensed to a pressure of two hundred pounds per square inch. The size of these tanks may be regulated to hold the amount of gas required. The improvement in the heating apparatus is not less marked. The old wood stoves of other days, which afforded intermittent heat, and were sure to set the coach on fire under the jostle of the most trifling accident, gave way to the more comfortable coal stoves, which were scarcely less dangerous than their predecessors, until by the plan adopted on the above named road, they were securely bolted to the floor and the fire doors supplied with gratings which effectively prevent the escape of fire to cause the car is upset. The appliances above referred to, involving but slight addition to cost of the old method of lighting and heating, illustrate the advantages of progressive and careful management, and contribute essentially to the comfort as well as safety of passengers.
